The 7th General Conference of the Asia-Europe Museum Network (ASEMUS) was hosted by the National Museum in New Delhi, between 15 and 17 March 2017. Entitled Engaged Museums: Technology, Access and New Audiences, the conference involved one day of training sessions, one comprising several presentations, discussions and debates, and a final day of cultural visits. It gathered over 20 speakers and approximately 70 participants from across Asia and Europe, including museum directors, curators, educators, artists and scholars and representatives of UNESCO and ICOM (The International Council of Museums).

Among the topics discussed in the course of the conference were accessibility in museums, emerging experiences in community and audience engagement, the role of regional museums in fostering local development, and the uses of technology in museums. Short summaries of the sessions and a final set of conclusions and ideas for future work are presented hereafter.

Dr. B.R. MANI, Director General of National Museum-New Delhi, inaugurated the 7th General Conference which was held in India for the first time. National Museum New Delhi has been a member of ASEMUS since 2014.

Wednesday 15 March: Training Sessions and Welcome Dinner

The first day of the 7th ASEMUS General Conference involved two training workshops designed primarily for young museum professionals. About 30 participants took part and actively engaged in training sessions focused on curatorship and social media for museum professionals.

Training Workshop 1: Developing Curatorial Concepts

This session aimed to provide a contemporary reflection on curatorship in museums and heritage contexts. It was facilitated by Professor (Dr.) Amareswar GALLA, the Executive Director of the International Institute for the Inclusive Museum, as well as Curator of the Amaravathi Ancient Town and Bapu Museum, in Andhra Pradesh, and an international heritage advisor to the Government of Andhra Pradesh, India. In the round of presentations, Professor (Dr.) GALLA was described by Anupama SEKHAR, Director of the Culture Department of the Asia-Europe Foundation (ASEF) as one of the “founding fathers” of ASEMUS.

The workshop included a reflection on the meaning of ‘curating’. On the basis of his own experiences in a wide range of countries, Professor (Dr.) GALLA argued that curating involved contextualising the museum as relevant and responsive to local communities, as well as a reflective institution. Curating should also be understood as a long-term process in which everyone can learn, in which knowledge is generated and shared, and where communities build their own sense of place.

In the second part of the workshop, participants were invited to work in groups, in order to develop a curatorial strategy for developing an exhibition on the Amaravathi sculptures, which are currently held in a wide range of international museums. Results of the working groups were later presented, raising a discussion on several issues including community involvement, museum inclusiveness and the ethics of collecting and curating.

For the first time, training workshops for young museum professionals were offered as part of the ASEMUS General Conference programme.

Training Workshop 2: Social Media for Young Professionals – 10 Key Ideas

The second training workshop was delivered by Jordi Baltà PORTOLÉS, a consultant, researcher and trainer in culture and international affairs, who works as the website and social media editor of ASEMUS. The session was meant to discuss the relevance of social media to museum professionals, as well as to provide some basic tips in this area.

Jordi Baltà opened his presentation by asking participants about their current social media practices, for both personal and professional purposes. Following a short introduction to the most popular social media tools and their characteristics (Facebook, Twitter, LinkedIn, Google+, Instagram), a presentation ensued, in which several key concepts were introduced, and tips were given for participants – the importance of engagement with communities of users, the integration with other communication channels and strategies, the use of tags and hashtags, the identification of influencers, and the importance of using data to monitor social media impacts. A range of examples were provided, from ASEMUS' own digital channels as well as those of ASEF Culture360.org and others. Participants were also invited to identify target groups that were relevant to their own institutions, and to identify goals and imagine ways in which to reach them via the social media.

Welcome dinner

The first day of the General Conference closed with a welcome dinner hosted by the National Museum – New Delhi and held at the Indian International Centre. This provided an ideal setting for informal conversations and networking among ASEMUS members and other conference participants.

Thursday 16 March: ASEMUS General Conference

Opening Ceremony

Dr. B.R. MANI, the Director General of the National Museum of India, opened the proceedings. He welcomed all participants and referred to the historic relations between museums in Asia and Europe, as well as the National Museum's cooperation with other museums in both continents in a number of initiatives. The ways in which people engage with museums in Asia and Europe are quite different – our cultural experiences depend on local sensitivities and ways of doing, and museums should be aware of this. Addressing the themes of the General Conference, he highlighted in particular the importance of regional museums in enabling access to heritage, and closed by hoping that participants would enjoy the conference.

Speaking next, Fionnuala CROKE, Director of the Chester Beatty Library and Chair of ASEMUS, thanked the National Museum and its staff for hosting the conference, as well ASEMUS for its tireless work in organising it. She presented ASEMUS, which promotes networking and building bridges to promote Asian art – sharing ideas, expertise, collections, whether online or on the ground. She highlighted how, over the course of her career, the real importance of networking had become increasingly evident – ‘our museums are stronger when we are better connected, more networked’. Furthermore, international networking had positive effects nationally: ‘the more engaged we are internationally, the more respected we are at home’.

The Director of the Asian Civilisations Museum and Vice-Chair of ASEMUS, Kennie TING, also thanked the National Museum and ASEMUS. He addressed the topic of ‘engaged museums’ which was the core theme of the General Conference – he described it as a topic that involves all museums, for three reasons: they now need to assume a more social role, engaging with the communities; audiences have become more sophisticated and expect to be involved in how museums operate; and, most importantly, the digital shift requires museums to engage online. Anupama SEKHAR, Director of the Culture Department of ASEMUS, thanked the National Museum staff for its work behind the scenes. She introduced ASEMUS, an organisation publicly funded by the 51 countries that make up the Asia-Europe Meeting (ASEM) – a good example of multilateral cooperation and dialogue. ASEMUS facilitates collaboration in these countries, and sees museums as a very significant sector. She stressed that ASEMUS hoped to engage more Indian museums as members, and encouraged participants to express their needs, so as to facilitate the provision of support by the network.

Finally, Dr. Mohan PRATAP, Curator for Learning and Education at the National Museum, expressed a word of thanks to all participants for their attendance, as well as speakers for wishing to share their knowledge and experiences. He also thanked the National Museum Institute, as well as the staff of the National Museum that had been involved in preparations of the conference.

Engaging with Regional Culture and Heritage: What Role for Regional Museums?

The first plenary session of the conference focused on regional museums, recognising their important role in maintaining the collective memories of communities. The debate was moderated by Anupama SEKHAR, Director of the Culture Department of ASEMUS, who highlighted that regional museums were the most numerous, and played an important role in fostering a sense of place.

Four case studies were presented thereafter:

- The Mekong Ganga Cooperation Asian Traditional Textiles Museum in Siem Reap, Cambodia, was presented by its Director, Professor (Dr.) Charu Smita GUPTA. She placed this museum in the context of the historic Khmer culture, and described its efforts in collecting pieces from communities across the countries in the Mekong-Ganga region, as well as in preventive conservation, social development and education.
- The Indian Heritage Centre \(IHC\) in Singapore was presented by Curator Nalina GOPAL, who described the relations between India and Singapore over history. The IHC's curatorial approach had been the result of extensive consultations and involvement of the local Indian community, which had also strongly engaged in providing pieces as well as in the Centre's activities to collect oral history, stories and narratives.
- The Sarawak State Museum, Malaysia, was presented by Mr. Tazudin MOHTAR, who highlighted Sarawak's significant ethnic diversity and the museum's community engagement programme, involving extensive consultations – this had allowed it to collect items from local communities. He also referred to the museum's educational activities, and regional and international networking, with a view to the forthcoming opening of its new premises.
- The Amaravathi Ancient Town and Bapu Museum, in Andhra Pradesh, India, was presented by Curator Professor (Dr.) Amareswar GALLA. He reflected on the museum's role in regional development, the training of young people from the community, the potential of fostering experience-based tourism, the importance of local, regional and international partnerships, and the need to work with women, who have traditionally been neglected from heritage narratives.

Regional heritage and regional museums were an important part of the agenda at the General Conference.

Following these presentations, Dr. Irena ŽMUC, Museum Councillor at the City Museum, Ljubljana, Slovenia, and Chair of ICOM's International Committee for Regional Museums \(ICR\), introduced ICR's mission and activities. ICR has recently addressed the role of museums in supporting communities in post-earthquake contexts, as well as museums' engagement with migrants and asylum-seekers.

Connecting with Collections

The session was curated by the India Foundation for the Arts (IFA), represented by curator Suman GOPINATH, and served to present two case studies of projects supported by IFA's Archival and

Museum Fellowships Programme. The programme aims to facilitate access and visibility to collections which are valuable but seldom known, and enable diverse narratives around existing collections.

Latika GUPTA, curator and associate editor of the Marg magazine, Mumbai, presented the project she curated at the Munshi Aziz Bhat Museum of Central Asian and Kargil Trade Route Artifacts, in Kargil, an Indian town near the border with Pakistan. A four-month fellowship had allowed her to make objects more visible, present and explain them better to the local community and tourists, foster an appreciation of everyday life and history, and reflect on the museum's impact on local communities.

Taking the floor next was Abeer GUPTA, visual anthropologist and assistant professor at the School of Design of Ambedkar University Delhi, who presented his experience working, alongside a filmmaker, with the Decorative Textiles Department at the National Museum, New Delhi, focusing on brocade textiles from Varanasi. Alongside traditional pieces were other elements of popular culture and contemporary design pieces which showed an influence of brocade saris.

Film Screening: Race Course Road (from 'The Day I Lost My Shadow')

The Day I Lost My Shadow is a short-film trilogy commissioned by the Indian Heritage Centre, Singapore, to Singaporean filmmaker K. RAJAGOPAL. One of its three pieces, Race Course Road, was presented by K. RAJAGOPAL and IHC curator Nalina GOPAL and shown thereafter. The Day I Lost My Shadow focuses on three iconic locations in Singapore's Little India, and connects them with individuals and events. The elaboration of the films relied primarily on oral history, because there is limited documentation for some of the events that were presented.

Towards a Culture of Accessibility in Our Museums: Good Practices and Challenges

This session, focusing on accessibility in museums, was moderated by Fionnuala CROKE, the Director of the Chester Beatty Library and Chair of ASEMUS. In her introduction, she referred to the several meanings of access in museums, including physical access, outreach to those that are not interested in museum activities, etc.

Several case studies and tools were presented thereafter:

- Kristine MILERE, Curator of Foreign Decorative and Applied Arts Collection at the Art Museum Riga Bourse, part of the Latvian National Museum of Art, discussed how accessibility challenges had been addressed: enhanced physical accessibility in a historic building the structure of which had to be preserved, collaboration with organisations representing people with disabilities, provision of guided tours for different target groups, and the design of tailored education and family activities.

- KIM Jongsok, Curator at the National Museum of Korea, Seoul, described this museum’s efforts to overcome intellectual and language barriers, through the use of artificial intelligence translation systems. The National Museum has translated several ICOM documents with automatic translation programmes and would now like to offer similar services to its visitors.
- Jenny SIUNG, Head of Education at the Chester Beatty Library, Dublin, presented its educational activities, meant to inspire visitors and the broader community. To this end, the Library has established a blog targeting educators, developed intercultural learning activities, engaged ‘community ambassadors’ as bridge-builders with individual communities, and takes part in international projects including The Creative Museum, which fosters visitors’ creative engagement.
- Shivani GUPTA, founder and chief consultant of AccessAbility, addressed access to culture for people with disabilities, stressing how taking measures to improve accessibility for this group was also positive for many other people. However, specific challenges include the limited visibility of people with disabilities, existing misconceptions, and the need to take into account diverse groups of people with disabilities. She suggested that ASEMUS should develop a Disability Action Plan, describing minimum accessibility standards for museums.
- Nao HAYASHI, Museums Programme Coordinator at the UNESCO World Heritage Centre, introduced UNESCO’s 2015 Recommendation on the Protection and Promotion of Museums and Collections, highlighting its focus on the social role of museums and their accessibility. Among the issues raised are the importance of education as a tool to enhance accessibility and museums’ potential to enhance intercultural dialogue. She also described ASEMUS as an extraordinary example of museum collaboration, and hoped this network would engage in disseminating the Recommendation.

Museums in the City

This session aimed to discuss the role of museums in city life, in terms of urban regeneration, social inclusion, community engagement and place-making. The conversation was led by Kennie TING, Director of the Asian Civilisations Museum in Singapore, as well as Vice Chair of ASEMUS. Introducing the discussion, he discussed museums' responsibility in encouraging community engagement in their cities.

The session involved a presentation of the Delhi Citizens Memory Project, an initiative of the Centre for Community Knowledge at the Ambedkar University Delhi, which is documenting and presenting neighbourhood stories across the city and actively engaging Delhi inhabitants. A range of activities have been conducted, covering oral histories, photography documentation and exhibitions and the plan to establish a travelling museum. The project was presented by Dr. Surajit SARKAR, Associate Professor and Coordinator of the Centre for Community Knowledge.

Contributions were also made by Dr. Philippe PEYCAM, Director of the International Institute for Asian Studies (IIAS, the Netherlands), a partner of the Ambedkar University Delhi, with which it shares an interest in knowledge, urban sites, culture, engaging and questioning; and by lawyer and researcher Raghavendra TENKAYALA, who described the case of the City Museum in Bangalore, reflecting on the need for museums to connect what happens within their walls to stories of specific individuals, through education and outreach activities, engaging to build meaning and value.

ASEMUS: A Conversation on Future Directions

This final plenary session aimed to present ASEMUS' activities in recent years and to discuss opportunities for future work. It involved an initial discussion among Fionnuala CROKE; Kennie TING; Anupama SEKHAR, who introduced a chronology of ASEMUS' activities since 2000; Kristine MILERE, who described her experience as a former beneficiary of the Educational Exchange and Outreach Programme; and KONG Hyun-Ji (National Museum of Korea), who presented the Virtual Collection of Asian Masterpieces (VCM), followed by an open debate.

In the course of the open debate, the following issues were raised:

- the importance of promoting training and capacity-building of museum staff, through workshops such as those held the previous day;
- collaboration, networking, knowledge-sharing and museum-bridging between Asia and Europe as a distinctive aspect of ASEMUS, which as a network facilitates spaces for collaboration among museums;
- the need to regularly review ethical practices in museum cooperation;

- ASEMUS' potential to foster intercultural education activities in museums, bringing together the diverse communities that live near them;
- the social impact of museums, and how museums can use social media for dissemination and engagement;
- the need not only to foster the visibility of and collaboration around Asian collections, but also Asian museums' ability to access European collections and address European themes, as this area is also marked by asymmetries; and
- the significant role of ASEF in facilitating the work of ASEMUS over the years.

Key Messages from the Conference

Final addresses by Dr. B.R. MANI, Fionnuala CROKE and Kennie TING served to close the 7th General Conference of ASEMUS. In their speeches, they highlighted the themes addressed in the course of the conference, including museums' engagement with their communities, the need for museum training to address this important area of work, and the need to continue fostering collaboration among museums in Asia and Europe. Staff of the National Museum – New Delhi and of ASEF were also thanked for their intensive work in making the General Conference possible.

Before closing, Fionnuala CROKE also announced that the 8th ASEMUS General Conference would be held in Kuching, Sarawak, in November 2018, hosted by the Sarawak State Museum.

Friday 17 March: Cultural Visits

The final day of the General Conference involved visits to significant heritage sites in New Delhi, including Humayun's Tomb, a UNESCO World Heritage Site; and the Sanskriti Foundation's Cultural Centre.

Conclusions

Over the course of three days, the 7th ASEMUS General Conference provided a space for networking and discussion. In this context, several proposals were made for areas that ASEMUS could further explore in the near future. The main themes identified are as follows:

1. Training and capacity-building: the need to strengthen the capacities and skills of museum staff and young professionals is an area of shared interest among many ASEMUS members. As the General Conference in Delhi showed, speakers and trainers invited by ASEMUS can make a substantial contribution to local museum staff, by providing specialised training opportunities – General Conferences provide a suitable setting for this. Other educational activities, including online training and peer-learning (in a model similar to the Educational Exchange and Outreach Programme) could be considered as well. Among the areas where further training could be provided are some of ASEMUS’ traditional themes (education and outreach programmes, curatorial practices, etc.) and others which emerged as topics of common interest (technologies, accessibility, etc.).

2. Community engagement and participatory curatorial practices: the central topic of the conference, engagement, led to several discussions stressing the need for museums to ‘go beyond their walls’ and find ways to engage communities more actively – not only as audiences, but also as participants in designing and curating exhibitions and other activities, co-creating narratives, engaging in intercultural learning, etc. As noted above, this could be a topic for future training activities, but it could also be addressed by other means – e.g. collecting good practices from member museums, discussing it in future General Conferences, etc.
3. Accessibility: this remains a universal theme, the several dimensions of which (physical, linguistic, educational, social accessibility) raise interest across ASEMUS member museums, many of which have expertise in this area. ASEMUS could consider discussing a set of minimum access standards, drawing on existing documents (e.g. UNESCO and international and regional documents on disability rights), and giving visibility to existing good practices.
4. Ethics and practice of international museum cooperation: the core objectives and values which inspired the establishment of ASEMUS over 15 years ago remain important, in light of the views collected during the General Conference. Taking advantage of its unique, distinctive position, ASEMUS could consider fostering new discussions on the ethical implications of international collaboration in the museum field, as well as continuing to facilitate bilateral and multilateral collaboration among Asian and European museums in curation and other areas of museum work.

Engaging with Regional Culture & Heritage: What Role for Regional Museums?

Regional museums are among the most numerous in the world, dedicated to maintaining collective memories of communities. This plenary will address the following questions:

- What role for regional museums in their community with respect to culture, local history, social development and language?
- What are key challenges faced by such museums in terms of access to funding, audience development, staff training, technology and networking?
- How could regional museums benefit from international co-operation?

Speakers:

- Professor (Dr.) Amareswar GALLA, Executive Director, International Institute for Inclusive Museum; Curator, Amaravati Ancient Town & Bapu Museum, Andhra Pradesh, India & International Heritage Advisor to the Government of Andhra Pradesh, India
- Ms Nalina GOPAL, Curator, Indian Heritage Centre, Singapore
- Professor (Dr.) Charu Smita GUPTA, Director, Mekong Ganga Cooperation Asian Traditional Textiles Museum, Siem Reap, Cambodia
- Dr. Irena ZMUC, Museum Councilor, Mestni muzej Ljubljana (City Museum of Ljubljana), Slovenia & Chair, ICOM's International Committee for Regional Museums

Dr. Philippe PEYCAM is the Director of the International Institute for Asian Studies, Leiden, the Netherlands. He is a trained historian whose recent book traces the origins of a Vietnamese public culture of contestation during the colonial occupation. The Birth of Vietnamese Political Journalism: Saigon 1916-30 was published by Columbia University Press (May 2012). For 10 years, Dr. PEYCAM worked as founding director of the Center for Khmer Studies, an academic and capacity building organisation in Cambodia, a hybrid transnational institutional model which is both Cambodian and American (a member of the Council of American Overseas Research Centers network). This double trajectory stems from an early interest in phenomena such as colonialism and modes of resistance to it; the creative role of the city as a privileged environment for new forms of social and cultural interactions, and, ultimately, consciousness; the importance of cultural forms and representations from material and immaterial heritages to institutional knowledge production, and the challenge of building cross-cultural, transnational institutional bridges out of these contexts. He sees these intellectual interests as having implications for concrete development policies in today's postcolonial societies. From 2010-2011, he was a United States Institute of Peace's Jennings Randolph Fellow. Since 2009, he is a Visiting Research Fellow at the Institute of Southeast Asian Studies in Singapore.

Mr. Jordi Baltà PORTOLÉS works as a freelance consultant and trainer in the areas of cultural policy and international affairs, with a particular interest in cultural diversity, the place of culture in sustainable development, and international cultural relations. He currently works for the Previously he was a researcher and project coordinator at the Interarts Foundation, where he coordinated the European Expert Network on Culture (EENC) between 2011-2014. He is a member of the UNESCO Expert Facility for the implementation of the Convention on the Diversity of Cultural Expressions, the U40 network 'Cultural Diversity 2030', the board of the Catalan Association of Cultural Managers (APGCC) and the board of the Interarts Foundation. Jordi teaches at the Online MA in Cultural Management of the Open University of Catalonia (UOC) and the University of Girona (UdG), as well as the Degree in International Relations of Universitat Ramon Llull (URL). He holds a BA in Political Science (Autonomous University of Barcelona) and a MA in European Cultural Policy (University of Warwick).

Dr. Surajit SARKAR is Associate Professor at Ambedkar University/AU (Delhi, India) and co ordinator of the Centre for Community Knowledge (CCK), an interdisciplinary research centre at AU, studying different living communities in India, their cultural knowledge heritage and their interrelations. At CCK, Dr SARKAR is responsible for conceptualising projects and creating processes for implementing research, documentation and dissemination. His previous work includes electronic media and community based cultural activities. Recently, he co-curated the photo exhibition, Camera Dilli Ka - A Delhi Photo Archive 1880-1980, organised by CCK at the India International Centre and offering a visual history of the city spanning over 100 years. At CCK, he is also involved with the Citizen's Memory Project, a digital archive of the lives of the people of Delhi and the oral history of the capital. The Citizen's Memory Project hopes to tie up with the Delhi Museum, which will be housed in the Dara Shikoh Library, a historical monument that lies within the campus of Ambedkar University.
